I offer workshops that address writing more competitive research and/or curriculum grant proposals. These are informed by my experience as a writer and reviewer of grant proposals. External grants for my research and educational activities total over $3.95M. I have been the recipient of seven consecutive NSF Research at Undergraduate grants (25 years of continuous support) and eight NSF curriculum grants.

These workshops usually consist of an open session about 2-3 hours long where we discuss how to write more competitive proposals. Most schools have wanted a session only on research proposals, but some have also wanted a session on curriculum proposals. There are two different activities that have occurred over the remainder of the visit. Most institutions have had me meet with individuals and small groups to discuss specific projects they are interested in pursuing funding for. Others have had me lead a session where faculty members provide a project summary, small groups then discuss each summary and provide feedback to the author, then I provide my feedback on each summary to the entire group, and we discuss general aspects of grant writing that arise during the discussion of each summary.

I will also serve as a private consultant to individual grant proposals. In this arrangement, a faculty member sends me a draft of the proposal before submission and I critically evaluate the proposal. Reviews are provided within 24 hours of my receipt of the proposal, except under highly unusual circumstances. I have helped over 100 faculty members in this capacity.

A summary of the workshops I have offered to date and institutions that have used me as a consultant for individual proposals is provided.
